

169939 - He divorced her via text message then he denied it or forgot

the question

My husband and I had a huge argument and after arguing back and forth he issued a divorce in a text. He texted Wallah its over. You are divorced.' He says that he does not remember. We have been seperated for four months now although he has been trying to reconcile with me before my iddah was over. I have refused to get back with him until now. My question is, does a divorce in a text valid? If the husband denies it even though there is proof, is it a valid divorce? If I refused to get back with him before and my iddah is over now, am i haram for him and do we need a new aqd? We have four children and we want to reunite.

Detailed answer

Firstly:

Divorce by writing, if it is clearly stated such as saying 'You are divorced (anti taaliq)' is a real divorce and there is no need to have the intention of divorce.

Secondly:

If the wife claims that her husband divorced her and he denies it, then his words count unless she brings proof that the divorce has taken place. This is from the point of view of rulings and verdicts, and the matter rests with Allah, may He be exalted, Who can see what is in his heart. If he knows that he issued a divorce, then he did not take her back during the 'iddah or do a new marriage contract after the 'iddah, then his intimacy with her is zina and is haraam.

If you kept his message in which he clearly stated a divorce, this is sufficient to prove that divorce has taken place. If this was the first or second divorce, then he may take you back so long as you were still in 'iddah. The 'iddah of a woman who menstruates is three menstrual cycles; for a woman who does not menstruate it is three months. The 'iddah of a pregnant woman lasts until she gives birth.

If the 'iddah has ended and he has not taken you back, then he is not permissible for you except with a new marriage contract that fulfils the conditions of having two witnesses and a wali (woman's guardian).

And Allah knows best.
