

176046 - Can we say “the Holy Qur’an”?

---

the question

My question is that I heard a lecture ; and correct me if im wrong but basically it said that we shouldnt necessairily refer to the Quran as the "Holy Quran" because Allah and His messenger (sws) have never reffered it to it like that ..so my question is what is the ruling on calling it the "holy Quran" or is it better to call it the noble Quran .

Detailed answer

There is nothing wrong with calling the Qur’an holy (muqaddas), because what is meant by (the Arabic word translated here as holy) is pure.

Al-Azhari (may Allah have mercy on him) said: al-Quddoos (the Holy) – which is one of the names of Allah – means the Pure, the One Who is above all faults and shortcomings.

See: Lisaan al-‘Arab, 6/168-169

Ibn Jareer (may Allah have mercy on him) said:

The Arabic word taqdees, which means sanctifying (making holy), refers to purification and veneration. Hence the phrase “subbooh qudoos (glorified, holy).” What is meant by subbooh is declaring Allah to be above all faults. What is meant by quddoos is declaring His purity and venerating Him. Hence the land is called ard muqaddasah (holy land), i.e., it is pure. What is meant by the angels saying Nahnu nusabbihu bi hamdika (We glorify and praise You) is: We declare you to be above anything that the polytheists attribute to You, and we pray to You. Nuqaddisu laka (We proclaim Your holiness) means we affirm all Your attributes, and We affirm that You are pure and free of all impurities and all that the disbelievers ascribe to You. End quote.

Tafseer at-Tabari, 1/475

But it is more appropriate to describe the Qur'an as Allah, may He be exalted, has described it, as He says (interpretation of the meaning):

“These are the Verses of the Book, and a clear Quran”

[al-Hijr 15:1]

“And indeed, We have bestowed upon you seven of Al-Mathani (the seven repeatedly recited Verses), (i.e. Soorat Al-Fatiha) and the Grand Quran”

[al-Hijr 15:87]

“(This is) a Book (the Quran) which We have sent down to you, full of blessings”

[Saad 38:29]

“Ya-Seen. By the Quran, full of wisdom (i.e. full of laws, evidences, and proofs)”

[Yaa-Seen 36:1-2]

“That (this) is indeed an honourable recital (the Noble Quran)”

[al-Waaqi 'ah 56:77]

“Nay! This is a Glorious Quran,”

[al-Burooj 85:21].

We should not give the Qur'an the title of “the Holy Qur'an” lest we be like the Christians who call their distorted and altered book “the Holy Bible”.

But if it is asked, is the Qur'an a holy book? We say: Yes, and it is the most deserving of being called holy and pure, and being described as superior to all other books. But we do not call it the Holy Book or the Holy Qur'an, so as not to resemble the Christians in that regard. Even though it may be described as being holy or pure, it should be given the names that Allah gave to it and with which He described it, so we should say the clear Qur'an (Qur'an mubeen), the Qur'an filled with wisdom (Qur'an hakeem), Noble Qur'an (Qur'an kareem), Glorious Qur'an (Qur'an majeed).

And Allah knows best.
