

199028 - What is the ruling on offering the regular Sunnah prayer that is usually offered after the obligatory prayer, before the obligatory prayer?

the question

Is it permissible for someone to pray the 2 unit of sunnah of esha salaah beforehand of the obligatory prayer ? If someone prayed it without knowledge about the ruling, what is the stand ?

Detailed answer

The regular Sunnah prayers are of two types:

1.The Sunnah prayers that are offered before the obligatory prayer. They are: two rak'ahs before Fajr and four rak'ahs with two tasleems (i.e., offered two by two) before Zuhr.

The time for this type of Sunnah prayer begins when the time for that prayer begins, and lasts until one begins to offer the obligatory prayer.

2.The Sunnah prayers that are offered after the obligatory prayer. They are: two rak'ahs after Maghrib, two rak'ahs after 'Isha' and two rak'ahs after Zuhr.

The time for this type of Sunnah prayer begins when the obligatory prayer is over and lasts until the end of the time for that prayer.

Ibn Qudaamah (may Allah have mercy on him) said: With regard to every Sunnah prayer that is offered before the obligatory prayer, its time lasts from the beginning of the time for that prayer until the start of the obligatory prayer. With regard to every Sunnah prayer that is offered after the obligatory prayer, its time lasts from when that prayer is finished until the end of that time.

End quote from al-Mughni, 1/436

It says in al-Mawsoo'ah al-Fiqhiyyah (25/281-282): The regular Sunnah prayers are connected to the obligatory prayers; some of them are offered before the obligatory prayer, such as the Sunnah prayer of Fajr and the Sunnah prayer that comes before Zuhr. And some of them are offered after the obligatory prayer, such as the Sunnah prayer that comes after Zuhr, the Sunnah prayers of Maghrib and 'Isha', Witr, and qiyaam in Ramadan (i.e., Taraweeh).

With regard to whatever of these Sunnah prayers come before the obligatory prayer, the time for them begins when the time for the obligatory prayer begins, and ends when the iqamah for the obligatory prayer is given, if that iqamah is given in a group or congregation (jamaa'ah), because once the iqamah is given for prayer, there is no prayer except the prescribed obligatory prayer. But if an individual is going to offer the prayer on his own, the time for the Sunnah prayer lasts until he begins the obligatory prayer.

With regard to the Sunnah prayers that come after the obligatory prayer, such as the Sunnah prayer that comes after Zuhr and the Sunnah prayers of Maghrib and 'Isha', the time for each of them begins when the obligatory prayer has been completed and lasts until the time of the obligatory prayer ends and the time for the next prayer begins.

End quote.

Based on the above, if a person offers the Sunnah prayer that should be offered after 'Isha' before he prays 'Isha', it is as if he has performed that Sunnah before its time. Hence it will not be counted as a regular sunnah prayer; rather it is a naafil prayer between the adhaan and iqamah, for which one earns the reward of a naafil prayer, not a regular Sunnah prayer.

An-Nawawi (may Allah have mercy on him) said: It is mustahabb to pray two rak'ahs or more before 'Isha', because of the hadeeth of 'Abdullah ibn Maghfal, according to which the Prophet (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him) said: "Between each two calls (the adhaan and iqamah) there should be a prayer, between each two calls there should be a prayer, between each two calls there should be a prayer" - and the third time he said, "for whoever wishes." Narrated by al-Bukhaari and Muslim. What is meant by the two calls is the adhaan and iqamah, according to scholarly consensus.

End quote from al-Majmoo', 3/504

For more information please see the answer to question no.

128164

With regard to the one who used to do that and was unaware of the ruling as mentioned above, then we hope that Allah, by His bounty and grace, will grant him the reward of one who offered the regular Sunnah prayer, because he was unaware of the ruling on that matter.

And Allah knows best.