

201472 - Concealing people's sins is a matter that is subject to further discussion

the question

I work in an emergency department. A girl came to us who had been in a traffic accident with a young man. The young man told us that he was not related to her, and that they had gone out together and he had been alone with her, contrary to the shar'i rulings. in an unlawful manner. At this point I had a disagreement with my colleagues.

Should we tell the Hay'ah [also known as "mutawwa'" or "religious police"], or is it better to conceal their sin? Are we sinning if we do not report it, on the grounds of keeping quiet about evil, or should we follow the example of the Messenger (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him), when someone who had committed adultery came to him and he turned away from him?

Detailed answer

If it is proven that the woman actually committed a sin with this man, then if she was not known for doing that, and it was an isolated incident and an error on her part, then it is better to conceal her sin and not report the matter to the authorities, whilst advising her, reminding her, calling her to Allah, and explaining to her the seriousness of what she did and what may result from it of negative consequences. If she repents, regrets it, asks Allah for forgiveness and promises not to do such a thing again, then it is recommended to conceal her mistake.

It was narrated that Abu Hurayrah (may Allah be pleased with him) said: The Messenger of Allah (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him) said: "Whoever removes a worldly hardship from a believer, Allah will remove one of the hardships of the Day of Resurrection from him. Whoever grants respite to (a debtor) who is in difficulty, Allah will grant him relief in this world and in the Hereafter. Whoever conceals (the fault of) a Muslim in this world, Allah will conceal him (his faults) in this world and in the Hereafter. Allah will help a person so long as he is helping his brother.”

Narrated by Muslim (2699).

But if this woman is known for committing evil and immoral deeds, and persists in that, and does not give any sign of repenting or regretting it, then undoubtedly it is better to report her to the authorities. In fact that may be obligatory, in order to discipline her and put a stop to what she is doing, so that she will not think of doing such a thing ever again.

Ibn Rajab (may Allah have mercy on him) said, after quoting a number of hadiths that speak of concealing a person’s sins and not exposing him to scandal:

However it should be noted that people are of two types:

One type

is the person whose situation is concealed and he is not known to be committing any sin. In that case, if he slips up or falls into error, it is not permissible to expose him or disclose his error, or to speak about it, because that is unlawful backbiting. This is the one concerning whom these texts were narrated, and concerning that Allah, may He be exalted, says (interpretation of the meaning):

“Verily, those who like that (the crime of) illegal sexual intercourse should be propagated among those who believe, they will have a painful torment in this world and in the Hereafter”

[an-Noor 24:19].

What is meant is spreading news of shameful deeds on the part of a believer who had been concealing his error, or who had been accused of that when in fact she was innocent of it, as in the story of al-ifk (the slander against 'Aa'ishah (may Allah be pleased with her)).

One of the righteous ministers said to one of those who were striving to enjoin what is right and proper: strive hard to conceal the faults of sinners, for broadcasting their sins brings shame to the Muslims, and the matters which are most deserving of being concealed are faults. If someone like this comes expressing repentance and regret, and admitting to a sin that is deserving of a hadd punishment, but he does not explain what it is, he should not be asked to explain what it is; rather he should be instructed to go back and conceal his sin, as the Prophet (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him) instructed Maa'iz and al-Ghaamidiyyah [two believers who each eventually admitted having committed zina] to do; and as the one who came and said, "I have committed a sin that is deserving of a hadd punishment, so carry it out on me" was not asked for details. If such a person is caught for committing an offence, but it has not been reported to the authorities, intercession should be made for him so that news of it will not reach the authorities.

Concerning a similar case it says in a hadith narrated from the Prophet (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him): "Overlook mistakes committed by people of good character". This was narrated by Abu Dawood and an-Nasaa'i from the hadith of 'Aa'ishah.

The second type is the person is known for committing sins and commits them openly, and does not care what kind of sins he commits or what is said about him. This is the evildoer who broadcasts his sins, and speaking ill of him is not regarded as backbiting, as was stated by al-Hasan al-Basri and others. In this case there is nothing wrong with investigating what he does, so that the hadd punishments may be carried out on him. This was stated clearly by one of our companions, and he quoted as evidence the words of the Prophet (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him: "Tomorrow go to this woman, O Unays, and if she confesses, then stone her." In such a case, there is no intercession for the individual if he is captured, even if the matter is not referred to the authorities. Rather he should be kept until the hadd punishment is carried out on him, so as to put a stop to his evil and deter others like him.

Maalik said: If a person is not known to bother people, and it was rather a mistake on his part, then there is nothing wrong with intercession being made for him so long as the matter has not reached the authorities. As for the one who is well-known for his evil and mischief, I do not like for anyone to intercede for him; rather he should be kept until the hadd punishment is carried out on him. This was narrated by Ibn al-Mundhir and others...

Shaykh Ibn 'Uthaymeen (may Allah have mercy on him) said:

What is meant by concealment is concealing the fault, but concealment cannot be praiseworthy unless it serves an interest and does not lead to any negative consequences. For example, if an offender commits an offence, we would not conceal his deed if he is known for committing evil and mischief, but if a man is outwardly righteous, then he does something that is not permissible, in that case it is required to conceal his deed. So with regard to concealment, we should see if it serves an interest. So if a person is known for his evil and mischief, it is not appropriate to conceal his deeds, whereas if a man is outwardly righteous, but he does something wrong, this is the one whose deed it is Sunnah to conceal.
