

99833 - Renting from a landlord who bought the property with a riba-based loan (mortgage)

the question

I am a young man working for some company, and I have rented an apartment. I found out that the woman who owns the apartment took a riba-based loan to buy it, and the rent is higher than the payments that she makes to the bank. Thus she pays to the bank the money that I give her, and keeps the rest as profit. I think it most likely that she bought the property in order to rent it out in this way. My question is: is the rent I pay for it regarded as helping in sin, or is it halaal?

Detailed answer

Taking out riba-based loans is emphatically prohibited, because of the stern warning that was given regarding riba, which applies equally to the one who consumes it, the one who pays it and the one who writes it down, as Muslim (1598) narrated that Jaabir said: The Messenger of Allah (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him) cursed the one who consumes riba, the one who pays it, the one who writes it down and the two who witness it, and he said: "They are all the same."

So whoever takes out a riba-based loan, and buys a house or goods with it, may make use of it by living in the house or selling the goods and the like, but he must repent to Allah, may He be exalted.

Hence there is no blame on you for renting from her, even if she borrowed money with the aim of selling it later for profit or having an income from renting it out, and the sin of that is on her, because she is the one who dealt with riba. See also the answer to question no.
